ERP systems not only for the big boys

It is a given that large retailers use enterprise resource programmes (ERP) to manage stock movements, payments and debt collecting. These systems make sense because they make it possible to run the operational and financial side of a retail business more efficiently while providing the type of business intelligence management needs to make strategic decisions. ERP systems reduce operating costs and make it possible to lower consumer prices. All this comes at a price. The barrier to entry is the huge cost associated with running and implementing these types of ERP systems. Read more...
